

RAVELRY

Rtú

inspired by the vibrant seasons of India

Chapter - 1 Rtú (Seasons of India)

Revelry's bar menu was crafted with a deep appreciation for India's diverse climatic conditions, which give rise to four distinct seasons: summer, autumn, monsoon, and winter. Each of these seasons brings forth a wealth of fruits and vegetables, contributing to India's abundant agricultural heritage and culinary traditions.

Drawing inspiration from these vibrant seasons, we have meticulously curated our bar menu to embark on a flavorful Indian journey for your palate. Our cocktails bear names in Hindi, the official language of India, adding an authentic touch to your drinking experience.

Revelry's menu is a creation brought to life by our Head Mixologist, Vince Varghese, in collaboration with Chef Rahul Rana. The dedicated duo of Vince and Chef Rahul has rekindled the cherished memories and nostalgic moments from their upbringing in diverse regions of India, paving the path for the inception of Revelry Chapter 1.

Varsha Ritu (Monsoon)

The monsoon season, perhaps the most cherished of all seasons, holds a special place in the hearts of every Indian. The mere sound of it invokes a rush of nostalgia within us. The smell of earth, the joy of splashing in rain puddles, enjoying steamy street food, rain-washed streets, and the sheer delight of sipping chai (tea) and indulging in pakodas (fried snacks) all take us on a captivating journey down memory lane.

Kahwa

(Indian Spiced Tea)

Kahwa is a traditional Kashmiri tea infused with spices. It has a very delicate taste, and it soothes the body. As soon as it rains, every Indian craves a cup of hot tea and onion fritters. Enjoying piping hot pakodas, lovingly made by mom, while gazing out the window at the rain, accompanied by favorite music or a good book, with a cup of masala chai, is the ultimate monsoon pleasure. This is our rainy evening ritual

Bhutta (Corn)

An ingredient that captures the essence of monsoon is 'bhutta' (corn). The smoky aroma of roasted corn never fails to tempt you to indulge. With the onset of the rainy season, you'll find 'bhuttewalas' selling coal-roasted corn, generously seasoned with delicious and spicy flavors. The irresistible scent of this 'Bhutta' is enough to make you savor one during the beautiful rainy season. This is our version of having a corn.

Grishma Ritu (Summer)

The highlight of summer revolved around school holidays. We eagerly anticipated the final day of school, anticipating our journey to our hometowns to reunite with relatives, play with boundless enthusiasm, extend our TV hours, relish the summer fruits, and fully indulge in moments of sheer laziness.

Kathal (Jackfruit)

A cherished memory associated with jackfruit involves traveling to our ancestral hometown and joining our cousins in a quest to find the sweetest jackfruit. It was the pinnacle of every summer break. The sweet fragrance of the fruit filled our entire home. The spiky giant has been cultivated in the Indian Subcontinent for over 5000 year

Jamun (Java Plum)

Jamun (Java Plum), one of India's most beloved trees, brings back cherished memories of childhood summers with its bittersweet, tangy flavor. While some climbed the tree, others stood below to gather the fruit, relishing them to their heart's content. In Hindu mythology, Jamun has been linked to revered figures like Lord Shiva, Rama, and Krishna

Shishir (Winter)

As winter descends, the exquisite winter blossoms captivate our senses with their beauty. India's diverse landscape showcases the enchanting charm of these flowers across various regions. The winter season in India is a spectacle, featuring snow-capped mountain peaks, cool and sunlit plains, picturesque beaches, warm deserts, and vibrant festivals that will truly mesmerize you.

Buransh (Rhododendron)

Referred to as the "crimson blossom of the hills," Buransh (Rhododendron) is a stunning flowering plant that's a true visual delight. The Buransh tree is renowned for its vibrant scarlet-red bell-shaped flowers, brimming with sweet nectar.

Rasam

(Spiced Tomato Water)

Rasam holds a special place as the ultimate comfort food for most South Indians, as it was a remedy for almost every common ailment. Whether you hail from Kerala, Tamil Nadu, or any corner of South India, your childhood memories likely feature the soothing presence of a potent rasam on days when you felt under the weather. With its thin consistency and sweet-tangy flavor, rasam remains an integral part of South Indian cuisine.

Daulat Ki Chaat (Almond Milk)

Daulat ki Chaat, a sumptuous yet delicately flavored treat, is a perfect winter indulgence. This centuries-old specialty from Old Delhi is created by frothing milk and cream into a feather-light consistency, infused with saffron and dried fruits, resulting in a delightful, melt-in-the-mouth experience. Even after 500 years, it remains a beloved winter beverage.

Sharad Ritu (Autumn)

Sharad Ritu, also known as Autumn, is the transitional season between summer and winter. During this period, temperatures gradually decline, and daylight hours become noticeably shorter. Autumn is renowned for its harvest season and is responsible for the emergence of vibrant ambers, reds, and yellows in nature's palette.

Trna-badaram (Strawberry)

One of the fruits that many of us have savored in India is the strawberry, as its cultivation is widespread in various regions. Memories associated with strawberries vary from person to person, but my most cherished recollection involves visiting Mahabaleshwar, a charming hill station in Maharashtra. There, with family and friends, we had the wonderful experience of strolling through strawberry farms, plucking fresh strawberries directly from the plants, and relishing them on the spot.

Chakotara (Grapefruit)

Chakotara (Grapefruit) earned its name due to its cluster-like growth, resembling grapes. A product of the crossbreeding between a pomelo and an orange, grapefruit is a citrus fruit thriving in Maharashtra, offering a flavor spectrum from bittersweet to tangy. My grapefruit memories harken back to childhood when this fruit was a regular part of our diet. Known for its immunity-boosting properties and rich in essential minerals and vitamins, it was a delightful and healthful treat during those years.

Ambri (Apple)

From catalyzing the discovery of the law of gravitation to being a harbinger of good health, an apple has the power to brighten your day. In India, Kashmir stands out as a dominant region for apple cultivation. Childhood memories resound with the wise words of teachers and elders proclaiming, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away," a maxim etched in our minds alongside countless other cherished moments.
